“ My cousin and I just found out that our suposes have been having an affair, this is not the first for her. They have two children ages 13 and 9, she is planning on moving in with my husband, they have a place together. My cousin agreed to joint custody if she broke it off with my husband, but she refuses and insist on figthing him on this matter. My cousin has known my husband for 26 years, so he has seen his behavior and knows his temper. In April of 2002 he was arrested for trying to come after me to kill me, he was stopped by the police and had the loaded shotgun in the car, he tried running over the cop to get away and finish me off. Will my cousin have a hard time getting sole custody and supervised visitation to make sure he is not around his boys? My husband is certain that with the money he is giving my cousin\\'s wife she will win custody. We were divorced in 2004, but remarried in 2007, can I use my divorce papers showing my divorce on grounds of mental and physical cruelty? I just want to make sure his kids are protected, and my cousin\\'s family is very supportive and he has an excellent job, so taking care of the kids on his end won\\'t be a problem. Any advice will help. We are in the process of finding divorce lawyers and we have documented proof of the affair. <http://wcncgqol.com> [url=http://byatkcme.com]byatkcme[/url] [link=http://ypbacnphk.com]ypbacnphk[/link]

“ My question - as a card-carrying, money-donating, meebmr of the Conservative Party of Canada. Why all the fear and anger over the outpouring of respect and decency for Jack Layton? Why did THIS article need to be published THIS week? It's like following up on Harper's majority win, suddenly, we (Conservatives) are supposed to be worried that everyone in Canada is going to abandon their core beliefs because they happen to have sympathy for Mr. Layton. I think BCL's characterizing is a bit strong, but, I really don't see why the response to the hyperbole of NDP supporters when they have lost an icon in their party HAS TO BE matched by a war of words from the right side of the spectrum. I mean - his body is lying in state as we speak on Parliament Hill. Can we just leave the rhetoric maybe for later next week?
