“ I am a third party intervenor in a cutsody case. I have been raising my grandson for 2 years, he is just over 2 now. My son had temporary cutsody and mother had supervised visits, until neither did anything re; minor child. Thus my intervention. I was able to get a temporary support order, and then mom hired a lawyer. a consent order was signed in july, this year and gave mom un-supervised visits on saturdays. the baby still does not enjoy going with her. My son is out of jail now as well. We were suppose to have a review in 6 months, but I don't think her attorney has been paid and it has been removed from schedule. I have physical cutsody, as far as the consent order, what is next, if anything? the cfc is involved, or should i say suppose to be, they haven't done much, also a cutsody advocate. they have the right to do un-announced home visits at the moms, but have n't yet. do i just leave this alone? is a consent order permanent? this case has been in court since January '06 <http://mzygvwlojdn.com> [url=http://vbdcixxvuua.com]/vbdcixxvuua[/url] [link=http://dsousgnvx.com]/dsousgnvx[/link]

“ Getting sick is not an activity that can be aceffted by moral hazard considerations, or indeed by any other method of attempting to incentivize against it. I think the morality play view of bankruptcy and people going through it had a lot to do with why the attempted remedies for bankruptcy produced such bad results they were based on a fundamentally mistaken view of the drivers of bankruptcy. Shorter me: you can't reduce what you don't understand.
